THE FILM

Color is the story.

Logline

On a washed-out summer afternoon, an ice-cold cherry-cola can becomes the spark that turns a sleepy street into a full-color block party.

Synopsis

Juno waits out a flat, heat-struck afternoon on Maple Street. Everything is drained of color except one cold can of Fizzy Pop Cherry Cola. The tab lifts. The can cracks. A wave of cola, ice and cherries sweeps through the frame, and the street erupts into a vivid block party.

An original jingle carries the transformation to the final packshot and the invitation: Open loud.

Fizzy Pop is a fictional brand. The brand, product, logo and jingle were created for this production.

The final packshot. The product, brand and packaging are original to the film.

“The question was simple: can an AI-assisted production create a 1970s-style TV spot that feels like a Saturday morning memory?”

WHY THIS FILM EXISTS

Make a commercial, not a technology demo.

Fizzy Pop began as a creative test. I wanted to know whether AI-assisted production could deliver the coherence, restraint and emotional timing of a real commercial. The answer had to live in the film itself, not in a list of tools.

I built the brand and the world first. The can is the only saturated object on a washed-out street. When Juno opens it, the product becomes the transition: a wave of cola restores color, rhythm and movement. The tagline is not simply an end line. It is the plot.

Every generated clip was treated as footage. I constrained the product and characters with locked references, cut weak moments, avoided motion the models could not hold, and rebuilt every graphic outside the generated image. The goal was never to prove that AI can make pictures. It was to direct a complete idea from first frame to last.

“Open loud, and the world gets loud with you.”

The drink becomes the transition. A cola wave moves the film from the faded street into full color.

FOUR DECISIONS HOLD THE FILM TOGETHER

Build the rules before the shots.

01 • COLOR AS NARRATIVE

The product changes the world.

The film begins almost colorless, with the can as the only saturated object. The product opening does not decorate the story. It causes it.

02 • REFERENCE LOCKING

Consistency was designed.

Four master references anchored the can, Juno, her full silhouette and Maple Street. Canonical descriptions carried those choices across every prompt.

03 • ONE JOB PER SHOT

Ten shots. Thirty seconds.

Each shot advances one idea: lull, product, crack, transition, party, pour, bubbles, reaction, beauty shot and packshot. Nothing has to explain two things at once.

04 • SOUND AS STRUCTURE

The can crack owns the silence.

The original funk-pop jingle opens sleepy, leaves a single beat of silence for the real can crack, then drops into the chorus as color returns.

AI USE AND PRODUCTION TRANSPARENCY

AI expanded the directing space.

Human direction stayed in control.

The film was conceived, directed, selected and finished as a coherent commercial. AI-assisted tools generated and assembled material within a defined brand system, shot plan and editorial structure. Weak generations were cut or replaced. Every non-logo word on screen was added as a designed overlay.

Originality statement

Fizzy Pop is a fictional brand. The product, logo, characters, story world and jingle were created specifically for this production. The logo is not derived from a real cola brand.

Production footprint

No live-action cameras or studio were used. The final film combines ten generated clips, selected and trimmed to their strongest moments, with vector graphics, sound design and an original music edit.
